Luxembourg based overland transport company Wallenborn Transport today announced a major expansion in Belgium, the Netherlands and the U.K. with opening of new offices in Amsterdam and London, employment of additional staff and deployment of more capacity.

This investment by Wallenborn follows a decision at Rutges Cargo for reorientation, moving away from air-cargo trucking to other sectors including healthcare, national transport & distribution and warehousing.

Jérôme Lorrain, CEO at Wallenborn explained: “our focus is on growing the scheduled and dedicated trucking services currently provided to our customer portfolio of global airlines, GSAs and forwarders and promoting the extensive RFS distribution networks from AMS and BRU which connect over 100 airports across Europe. We have developed an attractive and cost effective package of integrated services over the past five years including road feeder services, off-line handling, messaging and value-added services for special products. Airlines and forwarders increasingly require consistent service and product range at multiple gateways and Wallenborn with a strong presence in all the major European air-cargo markets is a reliable partner with the ability to improve quality and grow market share for our customers.
